

Bernard MUGRABI

Infant and primary schools.
Brussels, Belgium

GAMER TYPE (gamer type)

Professional:

I' m graduated as primary school teacher and also have a master in science of education. I've worked 12 years in a primary school (seven years with 6 to 8 aged kids and five years with 10 to 12) and I am now working as pedagogical adviser and representative for local authorities. I' m also in charge of some short formations for experienced teachers.

Gamification:

I' m convinced that games are – in a lot of cases – useful to education. Playing increase the motivation, drive the participants to push their limits to win and force them to find efficient strategies. Involving kids in games improve their socials skills and, if guided, may lead to sane competition and attitude of cooperation. Most of the gamers spontaneously share their tips and strategies. A great number of games enhance, or at least practice, the knowledge of the participants.

Interests:

Literature, RPG and board games, education, discovering new countries and cultures.

Gamer in me:

I like to meet the other players as they are in games. Most of the time we leave our common lifes and dare to show other faces of our personality. I also like the pleasure it provides me.